1. While Roberto (Donadio) Morena was in Bolivia between 16 and 21 November 1943, he was questioned at length by the immigration authorities, and his movements were watched. Possibly because of the evidence of official interest in him, Morena did not engage in any overt political activity in Bolivia, and his presence did not receive any mention in the press.
2. He did, however, contact various leaders of the Partido Izquierda Revolucionario (PIR), including the following: Herman Melgar, National Deputy; Herman Quiroga, National Deputy; and Fernando Sinani, Editor of the Marxist paper El Pueblo. In addition, he conferred at length at his hotel with PIR leaders Javier Galindo, the youth organizer, and Teodoro Patzi, a labor organizer. The latter had been specially delegated by the PIR as its liaison with Morena. It is not known at present what instructions or propaganda Morena may have left with PIR leaders.
